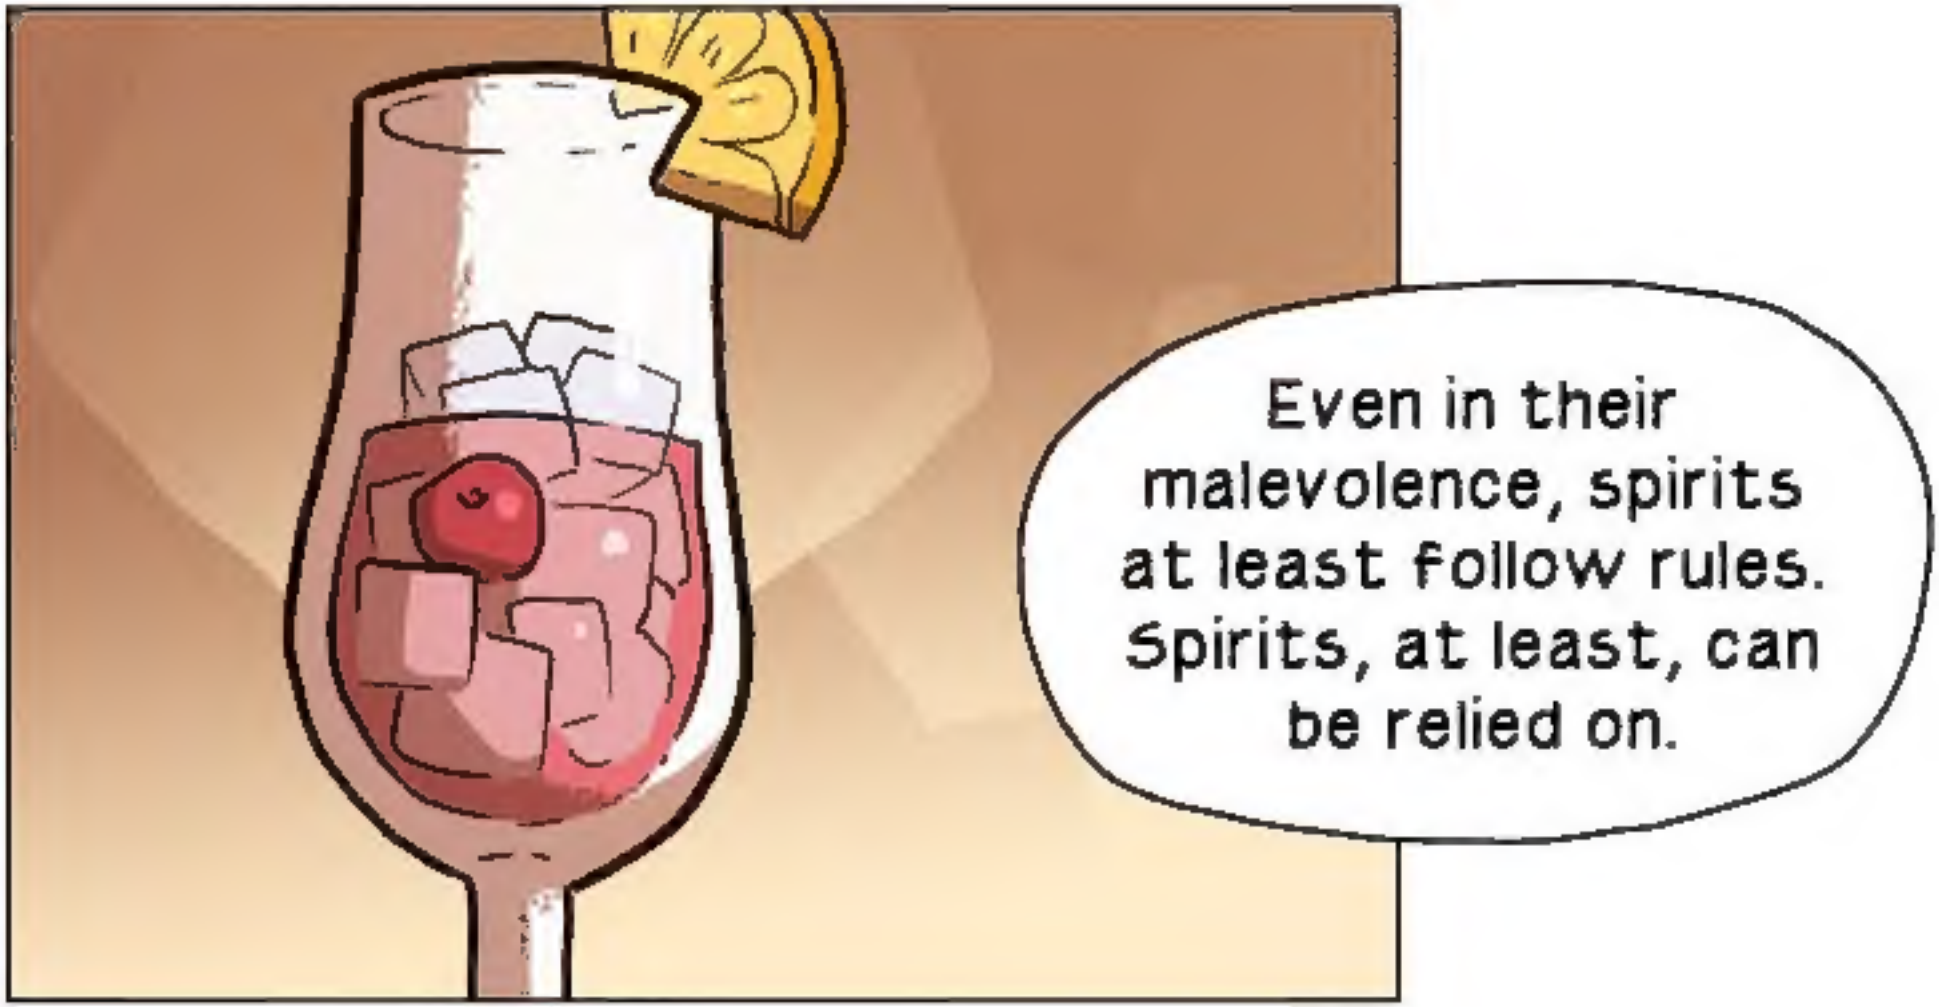
THE SWORD INTERVAL

BY BEN FLEUTER

The world has always been full of monsters. Humanity is just as much a part of that as the spirits.

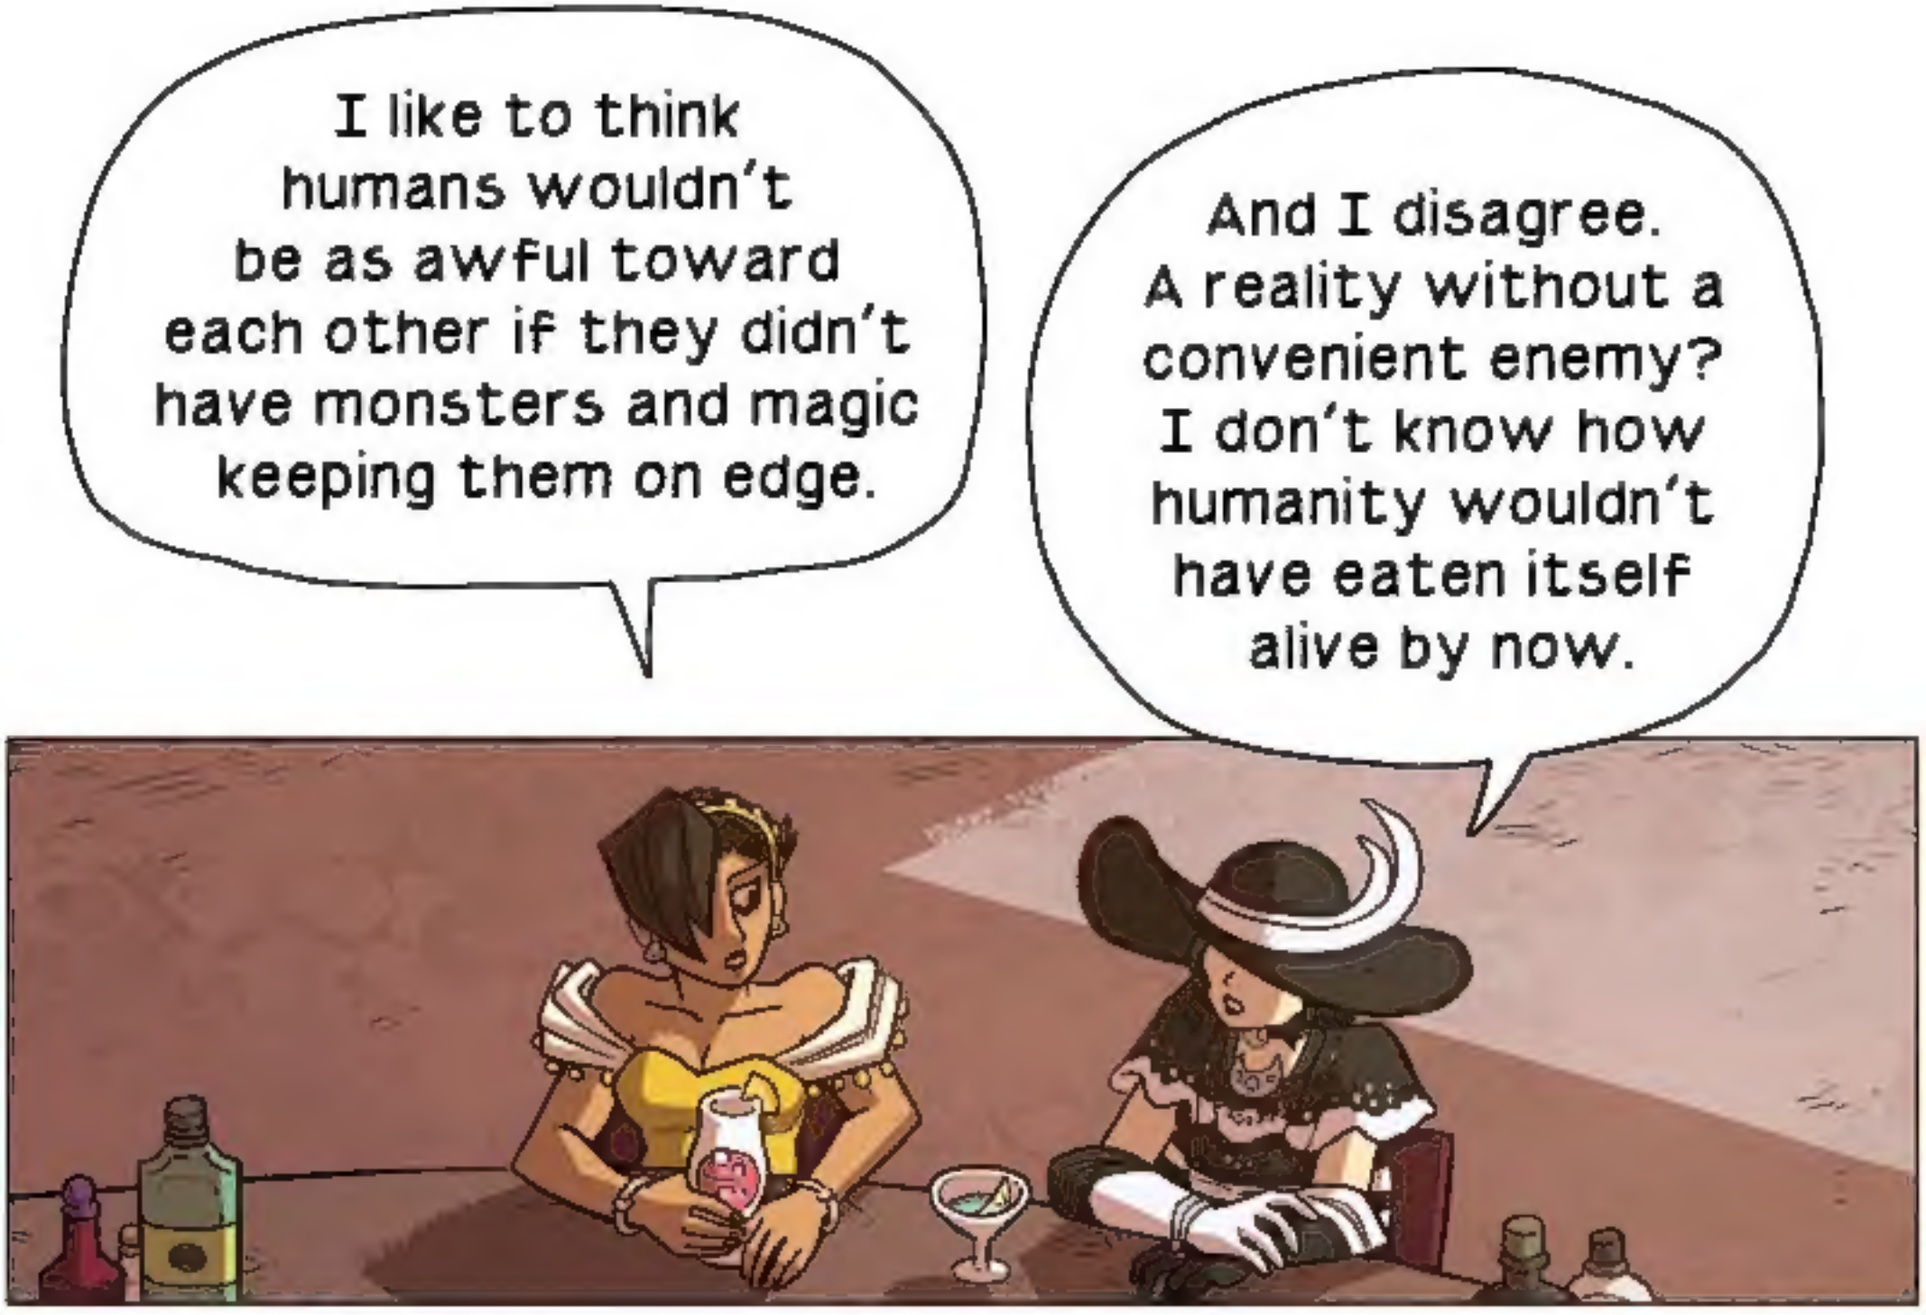


Even in their malevolence, spirits at least follow rules. Spirits, at least, can be relied on.

Destruction, hunger, a big pile of money to sleep on...

...Revenge.

A spirit's motives are clear.



I like to think humans wouldn't be as awful toward each other if they didn't have monsters and magic keeping them on edge.
And I disagree. A reality without a convenient enemy? I don't know how humanity wouldn't have eaten itself alive by now.

You feel this way but... you're marrying a human, Yun. Not a spirit.
Tsk! Yes, the inconsistency of it all. One can't even rely on the human race to be unreliable.
When you find someone you can count on, you treasure them.
